I have always had a passion for all things Spanish, particularly the dancing. And as a Brazilian, I like to think I’ve got some of that passion and rhythm needed to dance the flamenco. I wasn’t sure whether you could book flamenco courses in Spain, but after hunting on the internet I found GoLearnTo.com who offered lessons right in the heart of flamenco’s home – Seville in the Andalucia region of southern Spain. And so, after booking myself onto the weekend-long course, I found myself a flight to the southern Spanish city. It is also possible to get a fast train straight from Madrid to Seville if that’s easier, but flying seemed the best thing for me. It was the perfect start to my Sevillean weekend and a great way of getting to know a bit more about my fellow Spanish students. The next day, we took the 15 minute walk to the school for our first morning lesson. Located in Marcarena, the school is surrounded by one of the liveliest neighbourhoods in Seville. With tapas bars on every corner and surrounded by one of the liveliest music spots, we felt as though we’d already become the greatest of friends.

Felipe Mato, our teacher, was the perfect guide to how flamenco is really done. He was really excited about this opportunity to learn the flamenco and to be shown the art of clapping to you and I. By the end of the first session I already felt – or clapping to you and I. By the end of the first session I already felt – or clapping to you and I. By the end of the first session I already felt that I would ever be served in the UK! (nice cuts of pork, slow cooked in a whisky sauce). It was a lovely evening involving good food and beers that were colder than you would ever be served in the UK!

After a lesson of dancing together and generally making fools of ourselves, tripping over our own feet, we felt as though we’d already become the greatest of friends. Felipe Mato, our teacher, was fabulous and just what you would.

The art of flamenco.

The music of flamenco is one of the most unique and captivating forms of traditional music. It originated in southern Spain, particularly in the Andalusian region, and is characterized by its passionate and expressive style. Flamenco is not just music, but also dance and song, and it often involves elements of all three.

Spanish music is believed to have evolved from Arabic-Iberian influences, which have left a lasting impact on Spanish culture and music. Flamenco, in particular, is known for its complex rhythms and intricate structures.
